Scenic Beauty of the Ozarks.

(From the Poplar Bluff Citizen.)

A question which has always remained unanswered in the mind of the writer is why should the people of Missouri make long and uncomfortable trips each year to the mountains of Colorado, California and New Mexico in search of "scenery" when right in their own state, in easy reach within a day's ride from the uttermost border, there is spread out a panorama of hill and mountain and dale which cannot be surpassed anywhere in the world. In our own delightful Ozarks can be found all and more than can be found anywhere in the land, and the cost for sight-seeing is merely nominal.

The writer has seen the far famed Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts, the Green Mountains of Vermont, the Catskills of New York, the Rockies in Colorado, and in none of these sections is there to be found anything more beautiful or more entrancing to the eye than the Ozark mountain section of Missouri offers. The mountain peaks touch and kiss the sky, the hills and valleys are clothed in almost fadeless green through summer's sun and winter's snow; purling streams dash down the mountain sides and carry life to the growing crops in the fruitful valleys; sparkling rivers, with deep shady pools, invite the angler to a trial of skill, and the gamey bass, the trout and jack salmon always reward his efforts. In the open season the hunter finds the chattering squirrel, the fleet winged quail, the migratory duck and goose and other feathered targets. The tourist in search of rest finds succor from the cares of business and the ill are restored to health.

Lying back in lazy content upon some lofty mountain peak, the tired one has spread out before him a panorama of loveliness that gives rest to the mind, vigor to the body and inspiration to the intellect. The purple mists upon the distant mountain tops, the clear bracing atmosphere, the maturing crops in field and orchard, the flash of swift-moving trains down a distant mountain side afford a picture to be seen in few sections of the world.

One of the most beautiful sections of the entire Ozark range is to be found in the famed and picturesque Arcadia Valley, reached in a few hours from St.
Louis and Poplar Bluff via the Missouri Pacific Iron-Mountain route. Here man has done a great deal to assist nature, and the result is a spot which can only evoke exclamations of delight and surprise from the most blasé, no matter where he has traveled or what he has seen. Standing on the station platform, one has but to turn his head and there flashes before his vision the rugged heights of four historic mountains.

Off to the northeast a short distance is bold and old Pilot Knob, where more than a generation ago was located one of the most famous iron mines of the world and where are still evidences of the work done in times past in wrest-ing ores from the bowels of the earth.

To the east are seen the beautiful and restful outlines of Arcadia Heights, where is located one of the prettiest resorts—Ozark Inn—to be found in the state. On the extreme summit of the Heights the hotel overlooks the entire valley, and from the verandas can be seen mountain peaks more than forty miles away.

Ozark Inn is presided over by Mrs. S. L. D. Smith, and a more accommodating landlady cannot be found in the state. The tables are supplied with every luxury and the service is most excellent.
The Inn is a log structure, two stories high, equipped with bath rooms and many other conveniences. This is an ideal place at which to spend a vacation and the Inn is always full of people from the cities and towns of this section of the state.

To the west of the station, standing in frowning grandeur, is Shepherd mountain, one of the highest peaks in the range. It overlooks the town of Ironton and from its summit many grand views are obtainable.

To the south and only two miles away, is Tom Sauk mountain, and nestling at its foot are beautiful buildings and grounds of the Catholic college and convent. Just east of this and across the railroad is located the new Methodist camp grounds. This is an ideal spot and destined to be a gathering spot for some great meetings in the future.

The overworked man or woman who wants to spend a restful vacation, and at the same time enjoy a daily panorama of surpassing loveliness, should go to Ironton or Arcadia. There is everything here to be found in more distant resorts and many of the comforts and pleasures unknown elsewhere.

The Forrest-Macready Riot.

Astor place not only was a social center in the old days, but also the background of the partisans of Forrest and Macready. Forrest-Macready riot on May 10, 1849, was a spirited set-to between the partisans of the two actors, and there was a hot time in the Astor triangle while the riot lasted. The fighting occurred in front of the old opera house, which stood where the Mercantile library now stands. Now the two actors, the opera house, the social center, which was scandalized and terrorized by the riot, and the partisans who participated in it have passed away.

When a Big Hotel Falls.

Talk not of loot till you have seen a big hotel or fashionable restaurant in bankruptcy! The riot of pillage that follows the collapse of one of those extensive enterprises is incredible until you have verified it with your own eyes. Tip did not see the sack of Pekin by the allies, but he hazards the assertion that it could not have been a marker to the knock-down-and-drag-out methods that follow the appointment of a receiver for a twentieth century caravansary. The amount of capital invested in such a venture is large, of course, and much of it is represented by portable articles. Despite utmost care, it's next to impossible for a stranger to get a line on those assets, and many of them vanish before he learns to keep track of the often insignificant remainder.—New York Press.
